

Our Website Has No Maze

It's easy to find your way around our web site. In September, people made more than 160,000 visits to safetycenter.navy.mil, finding thousands of safety resources. We have checklists for traffic safety, safety inspections and hundreds of other specific and general topics. Our Photo of the Week has become the most popular page, as people absorb some of our webmaster's blend of humor and hair-raising images. We offer many statistics, with updates on trends and rates for all communities. Our Afloat, Ashore and Aviation directorates have many of their own pages aimed at their specific areas of interest and responsibility. You can also find dozens of ready-made presentations that you can tailor for local use, along with current instructions and a host of ORM resources.

The Media Department section contains all of our magazines. Navigating over to the Fathom pages, you'll find the current issue and issues back through 1999 in both HTML and PDF formats. There are quick links to several current articles as well as to all of the other resources available on our afloat pages. The afloat main page, in particular, is frequently updated with new articles and references in response to current events and trends in the fleet. Other sections targeted to specific audiences are diving, submarine, industrial hygiene, surface warfare, combat systems, deck, engineering, and safety in availability.

Another new feature, called SafeTips, is a handy introduction to new things you may be doing, or a refresher for something you haven't done in a while. The lists of precautions and advice are great training tools to pass around at meetings or through e-mail, and to post on bulletin boards.

So click on over and browse. You won't find any cheese — just lots of ways to keep people from getting trapped by hazards.
