

Just Shopping Around

The big yellow sign blocking aisle seven of this hardware store reads "Sorry, No Entry. Aisle Temporarily Closed." Which is probably why this lady felt it was necessary to lift the sign up, plow under with her shopping cart, and browse around for ten minutes before going elsewhere.

Doesn't make sense to me either. I suppose it's possible she reeeeeeealy needed something on that aisle, but I have another theory. I think she was just tired of the holiday crowds and was relieved to find an aisle with nobody on it. Hummm, maybe. Either that or she had a screw loose and she was looking for a screwdriver. Yeah, that's it.

Whatever the reason, fact is she should not have been there. If she did need something, she should have done what the other part of the sign says and ask for assistance. Ding, ding, ding! There's a bright idea.

Folks, I know it's sometimes hard to find help when you need it, but please, don't ignore warning signs posted by the stores. If the signs tell you to keep out or ask for assistance, do it for your own safety.