

Friendly Warning

I've done a fair amount of travel over the years, and I've seen many welcome signs at the edge of towns. Most are generic, but occasionally I've seen friendly, colorful signs that give an idea of the town's personality.

Often, the welcome signs are followed by warnings that speed is checked by radar, or you must buckle up ... somethin' like that. The friendly town of Branxton, however, has a different approach to warning passers-by. They say it like it is ... "Drive Carefully. We have Two Cemeteries, No Hospital."

It's a crafty saying that has encouraged more than a few passers-by to be safe while passing through. Whether you're out driving through Branxton, or in the middle of a metropolis, drive carefully and wear your seatbelt.
