

Headache Revisited

Here's an email I received last week from a Safety Petty Officer in California:

"I was recently visiting your website and found the Photo of the Week entitled "Not tonight, dear, I've got a headache." I thought this would be a good safety poster to raise the awareness of safety in my command. I proceeded to make a great poster, except I forgot to put one thing... The warning.

Three days after placing the poster (in full Technicolor) in Maintenance Control I was called from my office because we had a mishap in the hangar. A young Airman, a good worker and eager to please, had hurried himself into the bottom of a C-9B slat which was extended. He was taken to medical and returned to the squadron with ten staples in his head and an SIQ chit for 48 hours.

Needless to say, the next Photo of the Week poster will include the following statement:

WARNING: This is not a HOW TO poster!
